SECTION A (READING-18 MARKS)

HABITS

- 1. A recent Study of dining habits reveals how far standards have slipped. The majority of Britons no longer eat together as a family but of those who do, four out of 10 can't see anything wrong with bringing their laptops, iPads and smartphones to the table.
- 2. Indeed, the new social savagery is everywhere and not just at the dining table just step into the street and the communal atmosphere has gone. Most pedestrians are in their private bubbles either speaking on then mobiles or wearing headsets -- perhaps so they don't have to listen to others speaking on theirs.
- 3. At parties -- originally designed to promote friendship and romance the direct experience is being intercepted by smartphones as partygoers are too busy announcing their presences at the event and checking on the progress and whereabouts of their peers. In restaurants, theatres libraries school speech days, at home enfamille, people are distracted by a brightly-lit device that seems to hold the promise of something better.
- 4. It is a generational thing, of course The worst offenders are teenagers in terms of the group who are the most distracted because this is the generation who never knew life when it was 'real' the continuous future. They have no experience of subtlety, nuance or considered responses -only of instant, illiterate and ill-considered ones. The gratification teens crave is not the warm smile of affection or the approving comment from another human, but the sense of achievement they gain from electronic validation. Emails, texts and updates pinging in reassure them that they are alive and popular and abreast of rolling social news. Malachy Guinness. 28, who co-runs Bright Young Things Tuition, comes from a family famed for their exquisite manners. Says Malachy: 'My mother gets veto cross when I keep taking calls and texting but I say, the great thing about my smartphone is it allows me to work on the move. So I can either see more of you and continue working while I do so, or stay in the office and see less of you.

- 5. Malachy is actually a victim rather than a beneficiary, of new technology. If It was not available people would not be, enslaved to it. We, the pitying onlookers, are victims, too. The rudeness is rarely intentional. It is not that the worst offenders do not care about the effect their intrusive shouting into mobiles, for example on trains, has on others. They often are simply unaware of it
- 6. A good way to tackle such impolite gestures would be; like in a train/bus: If someone is shouting indiscretions into their phone for more than a few minutes, record it with your own phone then play it back to them. When they hear their own voice booming out at them from the seat behind they are more than startled. They get the message and bring their call to a halt.
- 7. The worst place to take a call is in church, second worst the theatre, the third during a speech and the fourth, in a restaurant. If you know you are likely to have an urgent call, genuinely urgent while In a restaurant, warn your companions before, put your phone on vibration and then go out to take the call in the street or lobby.
- 8. The real status symbol is to not answer your mobile but to have an underling do it for you stack up the messages and let you respond to them at your leisure, if there is a real emergency they can deal with it in the time-honoured way that real emergencies can always be dealt with.

The Habit of Reading

- 1. The habit of reading is one of the greatest resources of mankind, and we enjoy reading books that belong to us much more than if they are borrowed. A borrowed book is like a guest in the house; it must be treated with punctiliousness, with a certain considerate formality. You must see that it sustains no damage; it must not suffer while under your roof. You cannot leave it carelessly you cannot mark it, you cannot turn down the pages, you cannot use it familiarly. And then, someday, although this is seldom done, you really ought to return it.
- 2. But you, own books belong to you; you treat them with that affectionate intimacy that annihilates formality. Books are for use, not for show; you should own no book that you are afraid to mark up or afraid to place on the table, wide open and face down. A good reason for marking favourite passages in books is that this practice enables you to remember more easily the significant sayings to refer to them quickly, and then in later years, it is like visiting a forest where you once blazed a trail. You have the pleasure of going over the old ground, and recalling both the intellectual scenery and your own earlier self.

- 3. Everyone should begin collecting a private library in youth; the instinct of private property, which is fundamental in human beings can here be cultivated with every advantage. One should have one's own bookshelves, which should not have doors, glass windows, or keys; they should be free and accessible to the hand as well as to the eye. The best of mural decorations are books; they are more varied in 'colour and appearance' than any wallpaper, they are more attractive in design and they have the prime advantage of being separate personalities so that if you sit alone in the room in the firelight, you are surrounded with intimate friends. The knowledge that they are there in plain view is both stimulating and refreshing. You do not have to read them all. Most of my indoor life is spent in a room containing six thousand books, and I have a stock answer to the invariable question that comes from strangers. "Have you read all of these books? "Some of them twice". This reply is both true and unexpected.
- 4. My devotion to reading has never made me a recluse. How could it be? Books are of the people by the people, for the people. Literature is the immortal part of history; it is the best and most enduring part of personality. But book-friends have this advantage. over living friends; you can enjoy the most truly aristocratic society in the world whenever you want it. The great dead are beyond our physical reach, and the great living is usually almost the inaccessible; as for our personal friends and acquaintances, we cannot always see them. Per chance, they are asleep, or away on a journey But in a private library, you can at any moment converse with Socrates or Shakespeare or Carlyle or Dumas or Dickens or Shaw or Barrie or Galsworthy.
